Group Fitness Instructor

Description

The role of a group fitness instructor is to build fitness participation of new and existing users by providing group classes through a range of activities, including exercise to music, Step, body conditioning and circuit training. A group fitness instructor delivers instruction to users through safe and effective exercise classes and is responsible for the resulting user fitness experience, which should be positive and meet the users' wants and needs.

Scope

A group fitness instructor typically supervises groups of the general population within a structured exercise class set in a studio or open hall. The classes can be conducted with music.

(General population – apparently healthy people with no physical limitations and not more than one chronic disease risk factor. Based on: NHS. Exercise Referral Systems: National Quality Assurance Framework. 2001)

This occupation is informally referenced to the European Qualification Framework (EQF) level 3.
